ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC AND OF PRIVATE FUNDS BY PUBLIC AND BY PRIVATE AGENCIES

During 1929 relief from public funds was usually administered by public agencies and relief from private funds by private agencies. In several areas, however, private agencies carried responsibility for administering all or part of the relief financed from public funds. The expenditure from public funds for relief administered by private agencies was $498,520 in 1929—3 percent of the total expenditure from public funds for direct and work relief in the 120 urban areas and about 5 percent of the total expenditure for relief administered by private agencies. A small amount from private funds ($6,622) was used for relief administered by public agencies (tables 1, 6, and 7.)

Between 1929 and 1932 the amount and proportion of the public funds expended by private agencies and the amount and proportion of the private funds expended by public agencies increased rapidly. In 1932, $27,783,151 from public funds was administered by private agencies. This amount was about 13 percent of the total expended during the year from public funds for direct and work relief and 36 percent of the total expended for relief administered by private agencies. The amount expended from private funds for relief administered by public agencies was $6,590,791 in 1932, or 12 percent of the total expenditure for relief from private funds and 3 percent of the total expenditure for relief administered by public agencies.

The availability of Federal funds under the provisions of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 caused changes in a number of areas in procedures in financing and administering relief. Following a requirement of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in August 1933 that public funds for relief be administered by public agencies, the amount expended from public funds by private agencies dropped sharply, but the rise prior to August had been large enough to make the total for the year larger than that for the preceding year. During 1934 and 1935 the proportion of the total expenditure from public funds for direct and work relief that was administered by private agencies was negligible, but the proportion of the total expenditure from public funds for such relief that was administered by private agencies was the same as in 1929.

Expenditure from private funds for relief administered by public agencies decreased rapidly between 1932 and 1935. In 1935 the amount was negligible in relation both to the total amount expended by public agencies and to the total amount expended from private funds.

[1] Excludes expenditure under the Civil Works Administration, November and December.
[2] Excludes expenditure under the Civil Works Administration, January-March.
[3] Excludes expenditure under the Works Progress Administration, August-December.
[4] Includes expenditure from public funds administered by joint public and private agencies, 1929–33.
[5] Expenditure for general relief and for veterans' relief was not reported separately in certain areas in which local administration of the 2 types of relief was combined in 1934 and 1935.
[6] Includes expenditure from private funds administered by joint public and private agencies, 1929–33.
[7] Less than one-tenth of 1 percent.

Because of the use of public funds for relief administered by private agencies and the use of private funds for relief administered by public agencies, the expenditure for relief administered by public and by private agencies shown in table 7 is significantly different, especially in 1931, 1932, and 1933, from the expenditure from public and from private funds shown in table 1 (p. 10).

The difficulties involved in maintaining a record system showing the number of cases aided from public and from private funds by agencies financing relief costs from both sources made it impossible to secure data on the number of cases aided except in relation to the total expenditure for relief by the agency. For certain agencies, especially during the earlier years, reports on the number of cases aided were not available, although information on the monthly amount expended could be reported.

The data presented in table 8 on the average monthly number of cases aided during the year through different types of relief and the average monthly relief per case follow the plan of classification used in the summaries of agency expenditure shown in table 7. The group of agencies is smaller, however, as only the agencies were included for which comparable data were available for all years included in the study. No totals of data on cases are presented because of the duplication in the cases aided by more than one agency during the same month and the varying extent of this duplication during the period studied with its rapidly changing programs of relief administration in many areas.
